Deviations to Mendelism

Mendel's experiments used a very simple genetic system: each gene had 2 alleles, one dominant and one recessive, and genes did not interact with each other.

- We are going to look at some different forms of dominance, interactions between genes, and environmental effects.

Partial (Incomplete) Dominance

- Mendel studied complete dominance: the heterozygote looks exactly like the dominant homozygote.
- In partial dominance, the heterozygote has phenotype intermediate between the two homozygotes.
- Example: Four o'clock plants. Red flowers x white flowers gives pink F₁'s. Pink is intermediate between red and white.
- Selfing the F₁'s gives 1/4 red (RR), 1/2 pink (Rr).
